Step 1:

Colouring a white teddy or object - to start with, go over the teddy's face, arms and legs with your blender pen. Then, using your lightest colour work from the outside of the teddy's face, leaving an area free from colour in the centre. Colour the rest of the image in your lightest shades. To colour the bag, you will only need to add colour to the parts in shadow - in the image above, the light is coming from the right so the shadow will be on the left hand side.

Step 2:

Add your middle and darkest shades of each colour to each area. The balloon shows roughly how much of each colour has been used.

(TIP) If you go outside the lines don't worry - your blender pen will remove excess colour for you! Red is one of the hardest colours to remove but if you use the blender pen with it while it is still wet, it will remove the colour - use the chisel end of the pen to push the colour back within the lines

(TIP) If the colour is stubborn, don't keep trying to remove the colour - you will flood the area and will cause the colours to bleed even more. Let the ink dry completely and then try pushing it back again until the colour has been removed.

Step 3:

Working with your middle and lightest shades, blend out the lines until you get a smooth blend on all your colours. Go over the teddy's face, arms and legs with the chisel end of the blender pen to smooth out all the lines. This will lighten the image but still give you shape and dimension. To add a shadow, use GG1 to go all around the outside edge of the image.

Step 4:

To make the teddy and bag appear even more white add a darker shade to the background. In the image above, GG2 has been added to the left-hand side of the balloon, each side of the teddy's arms and along the ground under the teddy and bag. Blend out the lines with GG1 to make the white 'pop'.
